Simon De Courcay is the Head of Drama at Falinge Park High School and Performing Arts College. His department regularly use Boardworks Drama on their interactive whiteboards throughout their KS3 teaching.

Simon comments: “I think that the thematic approach to Boardworks Drama is really useful; it’s particularly useful for teachers who want to reinforce the classroom learning visually. It helps some of the team feel more confident in their teaching.”

Teachers at the school enjoy using Boardworks Drama resources because they fit so well with the variety of teaching they provide. “The lovely thing about Boardworks is that it suits a range of teaching styles; it can play to different teaching strengths,” comments Simon, who has wasted no time getting his staff trained up on the software. “For me, one of the things that makes it useful is that it’s very easy and accessible to use.”

The Performing Arts department have found that their students respond well to the artwork and audio recordings that are included in the product. “The product is very visually appealing,” says Simon. “And the audio and video are useful and appropriate to our curriculum. In terms of quality, I can’t knock it.”
