The Mountbatten School

Romsey, Hampshire

Alison Hack is Head of Humanities at The Mountbatten School in Romsey and uses Boardworks History resources throughout her department for teaching the KS3 and KS4 curriculum on their interactive whiteboards.

The students at The Mountbatten School respond really well to the interactivity in the resources. Alison comments: “The audio is excellent, I use that quite a bit – it’s a break from my voice, and the kids like that – to be able to hear it and see the source at the same time.” Alison adds: “Boardworks is great for group activities too where students can come up to the board and test themselves. These are particularly good for starters and summarising a topic... Kids love it – it’s just brilliant.

Alison concludes: “It really does save me time and I think that that is the biggest bonus there is. When you think about the time it saves across the school for those who use it, it’s really brilliant, which is why I’ve been responsible for bringing Boardworks into two schools now.”
