Manraj Ghale is Head of Design and Technology at Battersea Park School in London. He uses Boardworks KS3+KS4 D&T every week with each of his 13 groups.

He most often uses Boardworks teaching resources as starter activities, homework or worksheets: “I actually use it to give the kids homework based on some of the slides – I print them off for them to take home and come up with their own specifications”.

Manraj is happy about how comprehensive Boardworks D&T is, saying: “It provides a good overview and covers all the main points. I can look at the PowerPoint before the lesson and pick out the important pages.”

What he likes best, though, is the fact that Boardworks holds the attention of all his students: “It’s simple, clear...even KS4 kids need it clear. If you put too much information on the board, they stop looking. I get the students to come up to the whiteboard to interact with the activities directly. Sometimes they show me things I didn’t even know! They enjoy anything that gets them up in front of the class, showing off a bit!”
